ways controlled its machinery even though the Charter specifically exempts the internal affairs of nations from its jurisdiction.

With the new U. S. State Department under Rusk, Stevenson, and Eleanor Roosevelt, being of like mind, they now had a free hand. They moved in, cautiously at first, and consolidated their power. Intoxicated by their overwhelming strength in the Congo's power vacuum, they struck, not at communist Antoine Gizenga's iron curtain-style dictatorship, but at the last remaining island of civilization, Moise Tshombe's Katanga.

As of now the heroes of Katanga are fighting for their lives and that of their country. How the battle will end is impossible to say, but the fact that it is being fought by an organization supposedly dedicated to peace to tie a free people to a decadent and communist dominated central government should be no surprise to anybody. If and when they could, the UN would undoubtedly tie every nation in the world including the U. S. to the same kind of central government.

What else could be expected of an organization where the Soviet Union, not even including its six satellite slave states, has three votes to the United States' one. White Russia and the Ukraine have the status of Russian provinces, and their representation in the UN is equivalent to the U. S. sending UN delegation not only from Washington D. C., but California and Texas too. All this was created with the full knowledge and acceptance of the U. S. State Department of 1945. The State Department of 1961 has already begun to acquiesce to adding Red China to this roster.

Americans will do well to watch the news from Africa closely in the weeks to come. What happens to the people of Katanga today can well happen here tomorrow.

Cardinal McIntyre Hits UN
Educational Proposal

Republished from The Wanderer,
St. Paul, Minn.

A UN resolution coming up for approval by the U. S. Senate would take away freedom in education, says the Archbishop of Los Angeles.

James Francis Cardinal McIntyre told the St. Vincent de Paul Society last Sunday the resolution would compel this Country to socialize education under international control.

He referred to a document adopted Dec. 4th, 1960, by the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

If approved by the Senate, the Cardinal said, the resolution "will substantially eliminate all local control of public education at State or local level;" place all American education under Federal control; "over ride this Federal control and make it subsidiary to UNESCO as a world court and final international arbiter of education," and rigidly restrict private non-tax supported schools and colleges.

What Would YOU do?

you have cooperated with them? Would you have informed the occupying authorities about the activities of those who were resisting?

You probably think that this is a ridiculous and impertinent line of questioning. The answers are obviously "No!" But they were real in France in 1940. Why? Because the average Frenchman was totally unprepared for the events that overwhelmed his country. Before the armistice had even been signed, the German propaganda machine was telling the people of France that their greatest enemies were the British who had deserted them and the French generals who had escaped. It was very effective propaganda and there were many who believed it.

Now for another question, one which has to do, not with France in the forties, but with America in the sixties. If there were another war, and if for any reason America was defeated and occupied—whether with or without an eventual puppet government of so-called "Americans," would you feel that you owed allegiance to that occupying force? Would you feel that it was morally wrong to resist it? Would you inform against another American because he shot a Commissar, or because he joined a band of resistance fighters?

Do you think these are ridiculous questions? I think that if you will look at the maps of Europe, of Asia, or Africa, and even of the Americans, you will find many nations where these questions could have been asked a few years ago. Today, they are dangerous questions to ask in these countries.

If the people of France in the thirties, or the people of Cuba of ten years ago had asked themselves these questions, and answered them honestly, their resistance would have been increased a thousandfold. The trouble is that after the blow has been struck, no one knows whom he can trust. No one knows where to start in building up a resistance.

We do not believe the United States will ever be defeated or occupied, but experience and history are hard masters, and no one can say that this is beyond the realm of possibility. Ten years ago there wouldn't have been one person in the country who would have believed that we could stoop to paying tribute—"Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute" was one of our oldest national slogans, and yet today we are paying it. Openly to Cuba, but in a disguised version to more than 80 other foreign countries. Therefore, we must admit that as impossible as it seems, military defeat and occupation are within the realms of possibility. This is a black picture to paint, but it would not have to be hopeless, for though an occupying power might find the offices and avenues of Washington soft meat to digest, they would soon find a hard core of steel in the rest of the country. The people of America, not the scum that bubble noisily on the surface, still have the same blood and heritage of our ancestors who fought at Bunker Hill and Lexington, the men who won the frontier when it was a frontier and not a political play-boy's campaign slogan, the soldiers of Bull Run, Vicksburg, Gettysburg and a dozen other hard fought battles of the Civil War; and on into the two World Wars of our own century. That breed isn't lost in a few years, and in the end all of the effete political theorists that Harvard could turn out in a thousand years couldn't deny that it is there. But even the strongest men sometimes sleep, and if too many of us sleep too much, we may wake up to find ourselves sold out, our armies defeated and our country occupied.

Perhaps you are wondering what you can do about something that may never happen for many years. There are two things we Americans can do. First, we can stay awake and watch what is happening in Washington. We can make our republic a living government and not just a machine that we go along with because it offers to do our thinking and our work for us, and because it gives us utopian dreams in exchange for our votes. The second thing we can do is to stand up and be counted as to whether or not we will ever take defeat—whether or not we would fight to regain our country even in the awful event that our armies were betrayed and defeated, or our independence sold out in some future international summit conference. If enough of us declare these intentions now, before it has happened, those who would betray us may be deterred from trying. But the world must KNOW, where America stands!

As a typical American, ask yourself the following soul-stirring questions:

If America were ever taken over by force, from within or without, as it would be if the United States were occupied by a foreign army or by a subversive internal power, would you:

1. Consider it your duty to fight back, and give every possible aid to such forces as were fighting to restore our Constitutional Government?
2. Take the attitude that the new regime, if seemingly accepted by everyone else, should be accepted by you?
3. Probably do nothing?

Discuss the question with several of your friends and neighbors, poll them as to their individual reactions and then fill out and mail the coupon below. We do not ask—or need—any names, all we want is an indication of how many answered "Yes" to (1), (2), or (3). The replies will be tabulated as to the percentages of the total.

We believe the final figure will be conclusive evidence that the Spirit of 1776, is still predominant in AMERICA!
